

Documents that are no longer current or not being used for current research and development. The General Archive is the most extensive collection.

Documents with versions, such as standards, or where multiple editions must be preserved for the historical record, are included in separately indexed special archives. This avoids repetitive index entries in the General Archive.

Archived documents are organized by publisher.