

Council of Editors of Learned Journals (US)

“The Council of Editors of Learned Journals, an Allied Organization of the Modern Language Association, is an organization of editors of scholarly journals devoted to study in the humanistic disciplines. As the major national organization dedicated to supporting academic journal publishing in the humanities, our membership of over 450 editors represents an invaluable collective wellhead of editorial wisdom and experience. Making this fund of expertise available to new and veteran editors alike for discussing common editorial concerns and sharing considered advice is one of our major purposes.”

From www.celj.org/about.php, 30 March 2007