I am a 'culturally dynamic' New Yorker who practices her livelihood as a partner in Executive Performance, a general practice business consulting firm with a strong niche in creating life-wide "learning" solutions. I am now also one of the co-founders of the newly formed Baltimore-based Moodle Partner, Moodlerooms, Inc., sojourning very often in Baltimore with Facultyroom.org's other moderators and fellow co-founders Tom Murdock & Sheila Gatling.

FacultyRoom.org is a both a community of practice and support service operated by and for instructors using Moodle. As for a professional label, I refer to myself as a "master learner," others call me a consultant/trainer.

While I started my undergraduate education as a chemistry major (chemistry was far from my calling... but it did pay my tuition), I graduated with an Economics degree and enough English for a minor. I just love to read and my passion is writing... technically, expressively, and reflectively.

Fast forward more than 20 years later, several career paths, and 4 kids (and now... my first grandchild, too); and I completed my graduate coursework in Online Teaching and Learning in 2000. I absolutely love instructional design and facilitation (f2f and online)!

I love people, the internet, life-wide/lifelong learning and sharing the human experience within a global village... So, I guess it's no surprise that I describe myself as a "passionate and zealous moodler." My firm develops and delivers culturally dynamic online learning solutions for ALL learners using Moodle.
