St. Louis Community College Extends Partnership with PLATO Learning; College Signs Three-Year Developmental Education Agreement

MINNEAPOLIS--(BUSINESS WIRE)--June 21, 2006--PLATO Learning (NASDAQ:TUTR), a leading provider of K-adult computer-based and e-learning solutions, today announced they were awarded a $652,000 agreement with St. Louis Community College to continue and expand their use of PLATO(R) Interactive Mathematics for developmental studies.

"The College has had a partnership with PLATO Learning since our initial pilot in 1998," said Dr. Vernon Kays, associate dean, department of communications and mathematics, St. Louis Community College. "We offer developmental courses to over 1,000 students each semester through both on-campus and distance learning. We have decided to continue our contract with PLATO Learning because we found PLATO Interactive Mathematics to be effective as our primary tool for developmental education."

"St. Louis Community College has been an innovative adopter of instructional technology to increase student achievement," said Mike Morache, PLATO Learning President and CEO. "The new agreement will allow the College to reach even more students with anytime learning to help them remediate skills in preparation for college-level work."

Through the agreement, St. Louis Community College will receive licenses of PLATO Interactive Mathematics for use over the next three years, utilizing the college's intranet for local, on campus delivery, as well as Internet delivery to accommodate flexible online learning. The College also uses PLATO(R) Instructional Solutions for their developmental reading initiative across campuses, as well as for their business and industry training and health sciences programs through the Metropolitan Education & Training Center.
